Teaching Experience:Instructor, Diversity Issues in Psychology, Spring 2015

Course Description: Graduate students in psychology, counseling, and public relations. This graduate-level course is intended to introduce and familiarize students with a wide range of topics related to diversity in psychology, and in particular, concepts in the area of multicultural psychology. Multiculturalism has had a significant impact on contemporary psychology. Accordingly, this survey course is designed to highlight important historical and contemporary multicultural issues in psychology. This course provides an overview of some of the important topics relevant to diversity in today's society. Topics to be covered include, but are not limited to, culture, race and ethnicity, sexuality, discrimination, and cultural competence—as they relate to various psychological phenomena. The course is also designed to be experiential and will allow students an opportunity to learn about themselves and others through immersion and contact experiences. This course is designed to provide broad and general education that applies to psychologists and behavioral scientists in various specialties.

Instructor, Cultural Diversity in Psychology, Spring 2014, Fall 2014

Course Description: Upper-level undergraduate psychology majors. This course provides an overview of some of the important topics relevant to diversity in today's society. Topics covered include, but are not limited to, culture, race and ethnicity, sexuality, discrimination, and cultural competence—as they relate to various psychological phenomena. Please note that each topic could be (and deserve to be) courses in their own right. The course is also designed to be experiential and allows students an opportunity to learn about themselves and others through immersion and contact experiences. Progress is made toward course objectives through stimulating, constructive, and honest discussions.

Required Text: Mio, J.S., Barker, L. A., & Tumaming, J. S. (2012). Multicultural Psychology: Understanding our Diverse Communities. New York, NY: Oxford University Press.

Instructor, Health and Medical Psychology, Spring 2010

Course Description: Senior-level course targeting psychology majors. This course introduces students to the concepts, research bases, and substantive topics in health psychology. Students examine the contributions of psychological research to the understanding, prevention, and treatment of a variety of medical and health concerns. The course emphasizes a biopsychosocial model of illness, studying how social, emotional, behavioral, biological, and spiritual factors influence health. Specific topics include theories of health behavior, personality, stress, pain management, substance abuse, patient-physician relations, and chronic illnesses such as cancer, heart disease, and HIV/AIDS.

Required Texts: Sanderson, C.A. (2004). Health Psychology. New York: Wiley

Instructor, Introduction to Evidence-Based Psychological Treatments, Fall 2009, Fall 2010, Fall 2011, Spring 2012

Course Description: Required core course for clinical psychology doctoral students. This course introduces students to the concepts, research bases, and techniques of psychotherapy and behavior change. The psychotherapy endeavor will be placed within the general context of cognitive and behavior change as described by various theories of therapeutic intervention (e.g., cognitive-behavioral, client-centered, interpersonal). Students will be trained in a broad variety of specific therapeutic techniques.

Required Texts: Barlow, D. H. (2008). Clinical handbook of psychological disorders: A step-by-step treatment manual. (4th ed.) NY: Guilford.

Lambert, M. J. (2004). Bergin and Garfield's Handbook of Psychotherapy and Behavior Change. (5th ed.) NJ: Wiley.

Instructor, Introduction to Clinical Psychology, Fall 2005-Spring 2008

Course Description: Senior-level course for psychology majors. Of particular interest to students considering graduate school in clinical psychology. A variety of teaching methods, including lecture style instruction, multimedia presentations, interactive learning, and in-class debates. Course content includes the history of clinical psychology, major theoretical models, research methods, psychotherapy, assessment, current professional issues, and diversity issues.

Required Text: Plante, T.G. (2005). Contemporary Clinical Psychology, Second Edition. New York: Wiley

Co-Instructor, Advanced Practicum in Clinical Health Psychology, Spring 2006Instructor, Fall 2006- Spring 2008

Course Description: Advanced clinical psychology graduate students. This course is designed as a field placement, with clinical program faculty oversight, in settings where students gain practicum experience in clinical health psychology. Students are exposed to readings relevant to their clinical placements. The majority of class time is devoted to student presentation of current clinical cases with supervisory feedback and support from each other as well as attending faculty. Students commit approximately 10 hours per week to this experience. These hours will roughly be divided as follows: 50% direct client contact; 20% class time; 10% readings; 20% meetings with on-site supervisors and physicians. Students keep current on important scientific literature pertaining to their cases and may at times be asked to provide the basis for their intervention from the research or clinical literature.

Instructor, Independent Study in Adult Assessment, Spring 2007

Course Description: Advanced clinical psychology graduate students. This course is designed to provide an introduction to the science and art of clinical assessment as a foundation for the actual practice of assessment in a medical setting. The focus will be on the learning assessment techniques, such as interviewing and psychological testing. The course includes an experiential component in which the student will develop skills in the use of clinical assessment techniques, conducted in a professionally and ethically responsible manner. This experience will consist of supervised clinical experience at an external placement. Students will be required to demonstrate competence in the independent use of clinical assessment techniques.

Instructor, Multicultural Issues in Assessment and Psychotherapy, Summer 2007

Course Description: Advanced clinical psychology graduate students. This course provides an overview of some of the important topics relevant to multicultural theory, assessment, psychotherapy, and research in the U.S. A breadth of topics relevant to multiculturalism is covered (e.g., racial and ethnic identity; and gay, lesbian, bisexual issues). The course is also designed to be experiential allows students an opportunity to learn about themselves and others through immersion and contact experiences. Progress is made toward course objectives through stimulating, constructive, and honest discussions.

Clinical Supervisor, Psychological Services Center, Syracuse University, January 2006-Summer 2008

Objective: Supervision of clinical psychology doctoral students who are gaining clinical experience in the on-site training facility. Students will be exposed to readings relevant to their clinical work. Students present current clinical cases with supervisory feedback, consultation, and support from each other.
